Deadline of offer availability February 1st, 2010

Are you our new doctor for the mammography centre at Odense University Hospital?

Do you support strong, professional insight, collaboration and a high service level? Do you want new challenges in a new country? If yes, you could be our new medical specialist for the mammography centre at Odense University Hospital, Denmark.

You must be a qualified medical specialist in radiology, preferably with experience in clinical mammography and, if possible, screening mammography. You have previously used ultrasound diagnostics and are interested in stereotactic biopsy and breast MRI.

Your job will include mammography screening of women aged 50-69. You will carry out supplementary radiological examinations, sonography and biopsies. You have a natural curiosity for research and a strong interest in developments in this area. You like to involve others in your knowledge, as the mammography centre participates in the training of future medical radiology specialists, medical students and radiography students.

Socially, you will be working closely together with the center's other doctors, nurses, radiographers and secretaries, and you will be part of the team which ensures interdisciplinary collaboration with e.g. surgeons, pathologists and oncologists.

Personally, you are ready to move to Denmark to work and stay. You have a flair for and an interest in learning Danish and a wish to be part of Danish culture. You have good interpersonal skills, an interest in and a wish to be challenged and you are determined.

The Region of Southern Denmark will help ease your start in Denmark and, accordingly, you will, among other things, be offered intensive lessons in Danish. You will regularly participate in professional courses and further training where you will meet other doctors, giving you an opportunity to network.
