

Since the publication of the 2000 Human Development Report on “Human Rights and Human Development”, it has been widely recognized that an integrated approach bringing together dimensions of human development and human rights should be used in order to evaluate a country’s development process. While the literature on indicators of economic and social advancement and progress is abundant, with the Human Development Index considered as the primary reference, indicators able to capture a country’s performance and progress in the field of human rights are not so well established due also to difficulty of relying on objective and non-biased sources. Recognizing that progress in human rights goes hand in hand with progress in human development, the possibility to complement human development and human rights indicators can represent a useful instrument for designing and monitoring the impact of policies on both dimensions.

This workshop, organised jointly by University of Pavia and the Human Development, Capability and Poverty International Research Centre, Institute for Advanced Study (Pavia), is aimed to present and discuss the intermediate results of a FIRB research project on “Toward an integrated view of human rights and human development: theoretical foundations, measurement issues and policy implications” supported by the Minister of Higher Education, coordinated by the Institute for Advanced Study and in partnership with the Universities of Pavia, Padua and Jordan. A special attention will be devoted to the identification of possible linkages between economic and social rights and human development dimensions and their use for policy implementation.
